

Alastair Gee, The Guardian

Wednesday, April 12 @ 2:10 p.m., HUM 310

Alastair Gee is The Guardian US homelessness editor based in San Francisco. He previously wrote for The New York Times, The New Yorker online, The Guardian, The Economist and other publications. He was also the Monocle correspondent in San Francisco. In 2016, he was named a Falling Walls fellow, and joined the board of the Society of Professional Journalists' Northern California chapter. After earning undergraduate and graduate degrees at Cambridge he lived in Moscow for four years, and was an editor at The Moscow Times.

Outside in America / The activists with homes who sleep on the street: 'Our survival is against the law'

Three people will appear in a Denver court to contest 'unauthorized camping' tickets, but one of the defendants says she was only 'sleeping out'

THE NEW YORKER ONLINE

"The young queer writer who became Greenland's unlikely literary star. Niviaq Korneliussen is the rare Greenlandic writer to find a true audience beyond her native island." Jan. 31, 2017

Link

"The Moving Revelations of Gay Home Movies. By immersing viewers in the private worlds of strangers, home movies, like those of Harold O'Neal, captured the intimacies of gay life long before it was allowed to flourish openly." May 11, 2016

Link

THE GUARDIAN

"More than one-third of schoolchildren are homeless in shadow of Silicon Valley." Dec. 28, 2016

Link

"Soup kitchen puts San Francisco nuns on front lines of city's housing crisis." Dec. 11, 2016

Link

"Nobel Foundation board chair on Donald Trump: 'I'm very depressed.'" Nov. 9, 2016

Link

SECTIONS LATEST POPULAR SEARCH

THE NEW YORKER

PAGE-TURNER

THE YOUNG QUEER WRITER WHO BECAME GREENLAND'S UNLIKELY LITERARY STAR

By Alastair Gee January 31, 2017

Yes, students will receive event credit for attending.

